

Barber, B. N. (2007, August). Making the most of your research team/lab experience. Symposium conducted at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association, San Francisco.

Abstract:

The purpose of this symposium was to provide useful information for graduate students who were interested in joining, or have already joined a research lab/team and sought to maximize their lab experience. This symposium was unique in that it offered perspectives from both faculty and graduate students. Specifically, the symposium addressed three main areas that the authors believed would be helpful in guiding lab members on any research team: positive characteristics of successful lab members, the “ideal” lab member from a faculty perspective, and applying lab experiences to professional development.
