At the completion of the Broadcast and Electronic Communication major, the graduate is able to:

1. Critically interpret the evolving use of electronic media and mass communication using relevant research-based knowledge in law, history, social science and ethics.

2. Prepare electronic media messages in a form appropriate to their purpose and context.

3. Propose media solutions that serve their respective communities.