At the completion of the Electrical and Computer Engineering Ph.D. degree program, the graduate is able to:

1. Demonstrate mastery and technical expertise in necessary areas of Electrical and Computer Engineering as required by their research program.

2. Identify and formulate a research program statement and independently perform original research.

3. Communicate research results to a scientific audience.

4. Clearly identify contribution to a field in Electrical and Computer Engineering.