HISTORY (August 2006)
At the completion of the History major, the graduate is able to:

1. Comprehend the complex interaction of social structures, economics, politics, religion, values, culture, and historical memory in the development of human society over time.

2. Apply critical thinking methods to historical literature and sources.

3. Formulate and articulate in oral and written contexts historical arguments based on primary and secondary research.