JOURNALISM (August 2006)
At the completion of the Journalism major, the graduate is able to:

1. Understand the formal body of research-based knowledge in social science which relates to the fields of journalism and mass communication.

2. Understand the legal principles of their profession.

3. Critically evaluate the historical role and effects of journalism in society in light of their formal knowledge and ethical principles.

4. Produce news and information in a form appropriate to the medium and the audience.

5. Apply formal knowledge, ethical principles, and professional skills in service to the community.