At the completion of the Computer Science major, the graduate is able to:

1. Construct software systems that satisfy users' computing needs.
2. Communicate technical ideas clearly to colleagues and clients.
3. Learn independently emerging technologies and computing concepts.
4. Identify matters of personal and professional ethics within typical computing scenarios.
5. Verify the correctness and efficiency of an algorithm, program, and/or system implementation.