PHILOSOPHY Ph.D. (August 2006)
At the completion of a Philosophy Ph.D. degree program, the graduate is able to:

1. Provide accurate and in-depth analysis of principal teachings by major figures in the history of philosophy.

2. Develop one’s own position on major systematic problems in the philosophical literature, including those in the areas of metaphysics, ethics, epistemology and social philosophy.

3. Demonstrate in-depth understanding of a particular field of philosophy.

4. Conduct original research resulting in a major scholarly work.

5. Integrate knowledge of philosophy with effective teaching methods in order to teach an undergraduate philosophy course.
