Top O' the Mornin' To Ya, Education Majors –

That greeting is what happens to you after spending a few days at Notre Dame with the Fightin' Irish faithful I guess.

We had a great trip, and I hope you got to check out my brief photo essay of our campus tour as well as Dr. Maney's reflection on what it means to be a Catholic school. Sometime soon I'll blog about an educational leader I met in South Bend whose story is guaranteed to amaze you.

This week you can learn about how the Marquette Educator blog is doing with our readers. It's interesting stuff I think. This post was a fun one to write generally, and gratifying because we're doing well so far.

Please know that your visits to the blog provide much appreciated support. Whether you realize it or not, many of the blog posts are written with Education majors in mind most of all.

Finally, I hope to blog soon about our visit to the US Department of Education and some "celebs" we encountered there. Aren't you just dying to know whether we got our photo taken with the Secretary of Education? Sad to say, this is about as exciting as my life gets!

Anyway, maybe you'll like my future posts on MPS and the Mayor or a special one about my daughter learning to read. In any case, I know that you'll appreciate Dr. Cepelka's upcoming tribute to Mother Teresa as we celebrate this Centennial Year of Women at Marquette.

Have a great week. Keep working hard on behalf of your future students. They're counting on you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Bill Henk, Dean
