

Afraid of Bear to Zuni: Surnames in English of Native American Origin found within Marquette University Archival Collections

Oftentimes names of Native American origin are based on objects with descriptive adjectives. The following list, which is not comprehensive, comprises approximately 1,000 name variations in English found within the Marquette University archival collections. The names originate from over 50 tribes based in 15 states and Canada. Tribal affiliations and place of residence are noted.

History: In ancient times it was customary for children to be named at birth with a name relating to an animal or physical phenomenon. Later males in particular received names noting personal achievements, special encounters, inspirations from dreams, or physical handicaps. By 1900, Native Americans adopted the custom of adding surnames or family names after their personal or first names. Also by this time many used names of non-Indian origin and a number of names of Indian origin were translated from the native languages into English, French, or Spanish. English translations are used mostly in midwestern and western states; French mostly in northern states, Louisiana, and Canada; and Spanish mostly in southwestern states and Latin America. Furthermore, a number of Indian origin names, were eventually shortened to one-word names, making a few indistinguishable from names of non-Indian origin.

Name Categories: Personal and family names of Indian origin contrast markedly with names of non-Indian origin.

1. Personal and family names from Christian saints (e.g. Juan, Johnson): natives- rare; non-natives- common
2. Family names from jobs (e.g. Miller): natives- rare; non-natives- common
3. Family names from places (e.g. Rivera): natives- rare; non-native- common
4. Personal and family names from achievements, attributes, or incidents relating to the person or an ancestor (e.g. Shot with two arrows): natives- yes; non-natives- yes
5. Personal and family names from their clan or totem (e.g. White bear): natives- yes; non-natives- no
6. Personal or family names from dreams and visions of the person or an ancestor (e.g. Black elk): natives- yes; non-natives- no

Tribes/ Ethnic Groups: Names are expressed according to the following Library of Congress terms. Additional names noted to the right of the terms are alternative names not used in this list.
