History: The Archdiocese of Chicago began an American Indian apostolate in 1952. In 1982, local Native American elders, with assistance from two Dominican Sisters of the Most Holy Rosary (Sinsinawa, Wisconsin), established the Anawim Center as an outreach to Ojibwa and other Indians in the Chicago area. By 2003, its staff was comprised of Native American lay people and a Franciscan Sister, and by 2011, the center was renamed and relocated at its current site.

Holdings of Catholic-related records about Native Americans are unknown.
