

Instructors looking to procure electronic access to textbooks on behalf of students separated from their course materials should locate the publisher of the textbook below and follow the suggested procedure, which is known to have been successful for other instructors at Marquette.

MONDAY 3/16 UPDATE: CTRL-F for your publisher, as the list is no longer in alphabetical order due to the addition of the VitalSource and Redshelf Clearinghouses.

VITALSOURCE

To assist students at disrupted semester-calendar schools who are losing access to course materials due to Covid-19 campus closures, the companies below agree to offer access to etexts at no charge to students whose classes have moved online from March 16 through May 25, 2020. Students will be able to access the expansive catalog of etexts from participating publishers through the VitalSource Bookshelf app effective immediately.

CAROLINA ACADEMIC PRESS

*Will work one-on-one with professors to distribute time-limited ebook access to their students. The access codes will expire on June 1. The known contact information at this point is bhall@cap-press.com.
Contact: Paul Valecce (paul.valecce@cengage.com) .*

CENGAGE

*If your campus has been affected by COVID-19 and you'd like more information on how Cengage can help support student access to course materials during this term and provide services to transition to online teaching, fill out this form and we'll connect you with a Cengage Representative.
<https://info.cengage.com/LP=5086>*

DUKE UNIVERSITY PRESS

*The press is willing to give my students electronic access as long as it is through our library as many of my students have left their hard copies behind on campus. This can be facilitated through our on-campus library liaison, Rosemary Del Toro.
<https://www.marquette.edu/library/directory/rosemary-del-toro.php>*

MACMILLAN

Macmillan is offering free access for the remainder of the semester to our online products. Our marketing teams have begun sending Instructors information on how to sign up. But in case they don't receive or see these emails as some may be going to Spam folders, please tell them the following. They need to reach out to me and provide me know the following information (Please feel free to give them my email) :

- 1. Course and section number they are teaching*
- 2. Number of students enrolled*
- 3. Textbook they are using or would like to use.*

Right now, the best delivery of eBooks is through our online homework systems, these platforms have the full eBooks and are easy to access for students. How it will work is, once I receive their course information, I will create a class test. We will then send a URL to an online course for Instructor use as well as links for demos and training. This email will also include an access code for students to gain access to the platforms and eBook.

We are also working with our eBook partners VitalSource and Red Shelf to find the best process to deliver stand-alone eBooks, will have more information on this early next week. But we really encourage instructors utilize Macmillan online platforms to best streamline the delivery of eBooks.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

This is Kim Rimmer, your representative from Oxford University Press, and your inquiry was forwarded to me. Free access to OUP ebooks should be available shortly; I just checked our ebook vendor and it doesn't look like it's available right now, but I believe that will go through later today. See below for more information on the resources Oxford is making available to instructors and students, and bookmark our Covid-19 Resource Page. There's no need to be an OUP adopter to take advantage of these resources, so feel free to share with anyone else you think might benefit from these. I hope this helps make things a little easier for you all. I'll let you know as I hear more.
