recognizes outstanding educators

MILWAUKEE, WI (October 17, 2019) – Milwaukee-area teachers were honored tonight for their exemplary work as part of the seventh annual Celebrate Teachers & Teaching awards ceremony, held this year at Concordia University. This year's theme was Fostering 21st Century Learning, and teachers were judged on their ability to be forward-thinking, embrace change and facilitate innovative learning that integrates the use of technology.

Amy Zientek, a science teacher at Greendale High School, was awarded the 2019 Celebrate Teachers & Teaching award. Nine teachers in all were nominated for the 2019 awards. Zientek received a $1,000 cash award, and the remaining nominees each received a $100 cash award. They were honored in front of an audience of about 100 people celebrating teachers at Thursday night's event.

"Quite simply, there have been few teachers in my twenty-year administrative career that strive so hard to try new programs, new strategies, and new technologies with her classes and clubs," said Steven Lodes, principal of Greendale High School. "She embodies forward thinking and her ability to conceive, value, and implement change leads to innovative learning experiences for students."

In addition to the educators recognized, Mary Kellner received the 2019 Champion of Education Award. This award recognizes the lifetime achievements of an individual who, through their significant contributions to the field of education, have helped close the achievement gap and warrant the respect of educational thought leaders in our community. Kellner is the president of the Kelben Foundation, a family foundation that supports local educational and child-oriented initiatives.

Sponsors of the 2019 Celebrate Teachers & Teaching event include The Faye McBeath Foundation, The Milwaukee Public Schools Foundation and The Northwestern Mutual Foundation.
