This study focused on multicultural counseling with children. I selected this topic because it combined my professional interests and personal passions of multicultural counseling and working with children and families. This project provided the opportunity to blend these two areas and expand the related body of research. The intersecting topics of multicultural counseling and children remain relatively limited in prior research, making it an appropriate area for further research. The findings offer an in-depth understanding of the process of how providers integrate culture into counseling with youth and the impact of culture on the therapy process.
