LAUREATES ILLUMINATE CAMPUS

Nobel Peace Prize laureates Dr. Oscar Arias, former president of Costa Rica, and the Rev. Desmond Mpilo Tutu, archbishop emeritus of Cape Town, South Africa, visited Marquette. Archbishop Tutu was given Marquette University's highest award, the Père Marquette Discovery Medal.

Marquette University's last fiscal year, which ended June 30, 2003, was a period of remarkable activity and unbelievable progress. The enclosed report highlights some of the noteworthy moments we were blessed to experience during the past year. It also provides, as is customary, an accounting of the university's financial position.

Annual reports are strange creatures. They impose an arbitrary time frame by which to evaluate an enterprise that exists and evolves largely without respect to neatly divisible temporal units. So what we also have done in this report is place the past fiscal year against a broader backdrop. We have taken this opportunity to reflect on why Marquette matters – or phrased another way, what matters most about a Marquette education.

To that end, we have invited the Marquette University Student Government president, parents, alumni, faculty members and community leaders to tell us what it is about Marquette that matters most to them. Their very personal messages reveal the many different ways that Marquette influences those who are connected to it.

I, too, would like to weigh in on this topic. For me, what matters most about Marquette is its power to transform lives. It is an awesome opportunity when a young person comes to us with limitless potential, with important questions about life and faith, and with an inclination to serve others and lead with competence and integrity. Our task as a university is to awaken these women and men to a higher calling, and to ensure that when they graduate from Marquette they are better for the time they have spent here. Better educated, yes, but also better human beings. This conversion of heart and mind is what Marquette is all about. It is what we are called to do all year, every year. It is why Marquette matters.

Marquette's caring, dedicated staff and faculty members – right up to the president – are genuinely concerned about the students. They want to hear what students and parents have to say about the university, and how they can improve Marquette. We wholeheartedly support a Jesuit education that is rooted in learned, well-educated instructors who pass on their knowledge and experience to students, parents and the Marquette community. Small class sizes allow personal interaction with professors. And our daughters can graduate in four years. (One of our daughters graduated in four years even after changing her major!)

As a student-athlete at Marquette, I learned the difference between hoping and believing. Marquette strives to give students and athletes the skills and abilities to achieve personal success. In the classroom and on the court I was encouraged to push myself beyond my comfort zone. In doing so, I found the potential within myself to be a winner. The university community goes beyond simple instruction. It is a team that is there at the end of the game to hug and congratulate you and to share in your accomplishments. I always had the impression that I mattered to Marquette, and that is just one of the many reasons why Marquette matters to me.

Marquette matters to me because it has given me the opportunity to grow outside of the classroom just as much as I have grown in the classroom. The life lessons that I have learned through my involvement here have given me a greater appreciation for the world and every person who lives in it. Marquette has challenged me with opportunities to learn, to lead, to serve, to grow in my faith and to be the best I can be. Most importantly, Marquette matters because it has helped me to see that everything that I do is from and for the greater glory of God.

MOVING ON UP

At 1,856 students, the 2002 freshman class was the largest in 14 years. The record demand continued in 2003, leading the university to close the freshman application process in May – a step never before taken in the university's history.

Marquette matters because of the importance it places on giving back to the community. Through the many service opportunities available, students are encouraged, energized and nurtured to enhance their surroundings and the community as a whole. Many of us search for our own seeds of success; Marquette provides the environment for these seeds to take root. Our society can only be enhanced with such principles as faith, family and higher education and that is, without a doubt, what Marquette represents and why Marquette matters.

Marquette University was the place I called home for four years, and my experiences there truly made me a better person. I not only received a quality education, but built friendships and memories that will last a lifetime. The values and fundamentals that I learned there will always be with me. When you graduate from Marquette, you never really leave. You stay tuned in to what is happening on campus, and you always want to see the students, faculty and programs succeed – just like family. Marquette University will always be an important part of my life, because it is so much a part of who I am today.

When I think about Marquette, I think of values, gateways to opportunity, the Jesuit tradition of servant leadership, intellectual curiosity and character. In today's world the values that Marquette expresses, models and reinforces are clearly advantageous. There are a number of universities and colleges where students can acquire skills and knowledge. In business, we have seen some leaders who possess world-class skills and knowledge but lack character. A Marquette education builds, supports and nurtures character based on its mission and values. Being the difference is building character. I am often asked what defines great leaders. I point to excellent communication skills at all levels, the ability to be comfortable making decisions while learning from them, and the ability to develop excellent teams. The Jesuit tradition built these principles into my point of view at an early age.

DENTAL SCHOOL DELIGHTS

The new Marquette School of Dentistry building and clinic – the state's only dental school – opened its doors in August. The building, which was formally dedicated in September, is the first new building added to campus since Katharine Reed Cudahy Hall opened in 1994.

Marquette is a catalyst for the Milwaukee business community. Through efforts like its business plan competition, the Angel Network and its competitive classroom environment, the university is helping to secure Milwaukee's future as a place that values entrepreneurial efforts and start-up businesses. Marquette's reputation as a world-class university brings a global environment to Milwaukee. The success of Marquette is an excellent barometer for the future of our city.

Our university is a very dynamic learning environment. Here faith and reason meet. The wisdom of the past intersects with the hopes, aspirations and promises of the future. Truth and creativity are welcome guests. Quality questions are honored as human dignity and culture are celebrated. There is a collective awareness on campus that we are present guardians of our corporate mission and values, as well as co-founders of the Marquette University of the future. There is high energy and excitement at Marquette!

Marquette University has been an integral and important part of my adult life, first as a student and, for the past 19 years, as a faculty member. Marquette provides an environment that has continually challenged and supported me to grow both personally and professionally. The characteristics of Jesuit education and the values espoused here are not mere catch phrases. They inform and illuminate my scholarship, my teaching and my interactions with faculty colleagues, administrators, staff and students.

MAJOR WORK ON THE AL MCGUIRE CENTER IS COMPLETED

Construction got into full swing on the Al McGuire Center, a practice facility for the men's basketball team and practice and game facility for the women's basketball and volleyball teams. The center, constructed in honor of its indomitable namesake, includes strength and conditioning and sports medicine facilities, an academic center for student-athletes and a Marquette athletics Hall of Fame.

Marquette announced plans to introduce a new social welfare and justice major designed to provide students with knowledge and experiences needed to pursue successful careers in social work, victim services and social welfare policy. It is to be fully enacted for the fall 2003 term.

FALL 2002

Marquette enrolled an academically talented freshman class, including 17 National Merit Scholars, the second most among Jesuit universities in 2002.

Marquette implemented a comprehensive core curriculum, the Core of Common Studies, which applies to students in all undergraduate colleges and provides students with a clearer sense of how their core courses compliment their chosen paths of study.

The Arnold L. Mitchem Dissertation Fellowship Program was established to introduce a more diverse pool of professors into the ranks of academia. Mitchem Fellowships are awarded to doctoral candidates from underrepresented ethnic groups who come to Marquette for Ph.D. studies.

THE MANRESA PROJECT INSPIRES STUDENTS THROUGH FAITH-BASED PROGRAMS

SUMMER 2002

The Marquette Golden Angel Network, based on the national and international business angel model, was created in the College of Business Administration to invest in and encourage entrepreneurial efforts of students, faculty, alumni and friends.

A $1 million endowment was established by the Goizueta Foundation to support need-based scholarships for Hispanic and Latino students.

The Manresa Project received a five-year, $2 million grant from the Lilly Endowment Inc., as part of a nationwide effort to revitalize the role of religion in higher education and encourage more students to consider church ministry as a vocation.

Marquette's Department of Counseling and Educational Psychology was designated the 2002 Department of the Year by the American Psychological Association of Graduate Students.

Coach Dave Uhrich led the women's cross country team to claim its third straight Conference USA Championship title.

The Department of Physical Therapy implemented a doctoral program in fall of 2002 making Marquette the first university in the state of Wisconsin to grant the degree.

The U.S. Department of Education National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research awarded $4.5 million to Marquette and its partners to establish a center to evaluate methods and technologies to increase the usability and accessibility of health care equipment.

WINTER 2002 - '03

Marquette's School of Education developed the first available online master's degree program in Wisconsin. The 30-credit program was designed for teachers and corporate trainers interested in improving their understanding of teaching and learning.

More than 250 newly designed pages of the core university Web site were launched. The pages make the site more navigable and target prospective students and visitors to Marquette.

Watergate journalist Carl Bernstein delivered the 2003 William R. Burleigh and E.W. Scripps lecture, which is sponsored by the College of Communication.

SPRING 2003

Marquette's ranking rose to No. 91 in the U.S. News & World Report survey of colleges and universities, placing it in the top 100 of doctoral-granting universities in the nation. Additionally, eight of Marquette's graduate programs were ranked among the best in the country. The part-time M.B.A program was ranked No. 11 and the Law School was ranked in the top 100 for the first time. College of Nursing graduate programs ranked 53rd, earning the college a spot in the top 20 percent of programs around the country. Other top-ranked programs were nurse-midwifery at No. 13, physical therapy at No. 23, physician assistant studies at No. 33 and the School of Education at No. 57.

KENYAN NURSES COME TO CAMPUS FOR AIDS TRAINING

The College of Nursing developed a revolutionary AIDS education and treatment training program for nurses in Africa. The program received a four-year, $1.8 million grant from the U.S. Agency for International Development and was singled out for praise by President George W. Bush.

MARQUETTE MOMENTS

Points of pride for the university, July 1, 2002 – June 30, 2003

Human rights activist Kerry Kennedy Cuomo visited campus to discuss the issues she raises in her book Speak Truth to Power: Human Rights Defenders Who Are Changing Our World.

A final fund-raising drive during men's basketball postseason play secured the last $4 million needed to complete funding for the Al McGuire Center. In one 24-hour period, $2 million dollars was donated. During a March phone-a-thon, $55,695 was raised in one night. The phone-a-thon typically generates $5,000 in one evening.

The College of Nursing unveiled a Ph.D. program to address the critical shortage of faculty needed to educate nurses in this country.

Honored at the Père Marquette Day Dinner, the winners of the 2003 Faculty Awards for Teaching Excellence were Dr. Jeanne M. Hossenlopp, associate professor of chemistry; Dr. Edward J. Inderrieden, associate professor of management; and, Dr. Janet W. Krejci, associate professor of nursing. The award is the highest distinction the university presents to faculty.

Track and cross country standout Brianna Dahm was named C-USA's Most Outstanding Female Athlete.

More than 1,300 Marquette students volunteered during the annual Hunger Clean-Up initiative in April. The student volunteers helped raise $15,000 for local organizations working to combat hunger and homelessness. Since 1989, Marquette students have raised $190,000 for Milwaukee-area organizations.

Basketball star Dwyane Wade became the first Marquette player to earn Associated Press First Team All-American honors since 1978 and was named Conference-USA men's basketball Player of the Year. Wade was selected in the first round of the draft by the Miami Heat of the National Basketball Association.

Entrepreneur magazine spotlighted Marquette University as one of the nation's top 100 entrepreneurial universities for the work that the College of Business Administration's Kohler Center for Entrepreneurship does to foster development and growth of new business in Milwaukee.

Marquette celebrated funding of its first endowed deanship. The deanship, held by alumnus Stanley Jaskolski, Eng '62, Grad '64 and '67, is in the College of Engineering. The university also welcomed Dr. Lea Acord and Joseph Kearney as deans of the College of Nursing and the Law School.

Men's basketball Head Coach Tom Crean, who led the Golden Eagles to a 27-6 season, a Conference USA regular-season title and a Final Four appearance, affirmed his commitment to Marquette basketball by signing a long-term contract extension.

FINANCIAL REPORT

We invite you to review the financial summaries of the balance sheet, income statement and cash flow presented previously in consolidated form for the fiscal year ended on June 30, 2003. There is no question that it is the people – alumni, faculty, students, parents and friends of Marquette – who truly create the portrait of a great university. But the financial statements do tell a story of their own and document in clear and compelling terms the opportunities and challenges that Marquette University faces.

University Assets: Endowment, Facilities and Reputation

By any measure, fiscal 2003 was a good year for Marquette. The university's tangible assets experienced considerable growth. The net value of property, buildings and equipment recorded an increase of $33 million, largely because of the opening of the School of Dentistry's new building and clinic. It was the university's first new building since 1994, and it was made possible by a successful $35 million fund-raising effort. Fiscal 2003 also saw the stage set for additional significant net increases in assets in the years ahead. Fueled by the tremendous success of the men's basketball team, the university finished raising $31 million for the Al McGuire Center athletics facility and prepared to open the $55 million Rev. John P. Raynor, S.J., Library. Marquette also embarked on two additional construction projects, a new university parking structure on the east end of campus and a 61-unit addition to the Campus Town student apartments on Wells Street. Both of those projects will pay for themselves through user fees.

After two years of declining returns due to dramatic downturns in the financial markets, the university's endowment recognized positive returns for fiscal 2003 and had a market value, as of June 30, 2003, of $203.4 million. The small size of the Marquette endowment relative to our peer universities continues to be a significant constraint on the university's operating budget. Increasing support of endowed programs is a top priority for the university. Magis: The Campaign for Marquette, now in its fifth year, has already raised $39 million for the endowment and has identified another $84.3 million in endowed programs to support scholarships, teaching and research.

Marquette's most important assets though are not the size of its endowment or the value of its buildings and equipment, but rather the reputation and demand that Marquette University commands in the marketplace. In this regard, Marquette can celebrate a marked change in status. In the 2003 U.S. News & World Report rankings, Marquette's academic ranking rose to No. 91, placing it in the top 100 of national, doctoral-granting universities in the country. The rise was due in large part to an increase in the academic reputation scores Marquette received from the leaders of peer academic institutions. Similarly, heightened demand for a Marquette education was reflected in the enrollment of the largest freshman class since 1988 and in the record number and quality of applications for admission to the Class of 2007.

Operating successes

The financial performance of the university in fiscal 2003 is further reflected in the annual income statement. For the sixth consecutive year Marquette ended the year with a small surplus made possible by the growth in demand for a Marquette education and the careful financial stewardship that characterizes the university's day-to-day operations. Driven by the increase in the size of the student body and Marquette's enhanced national prominence, net tuition revenue increased $9.5 million over fiscal 2002 and auxiliary revenue increased by $5.4 million. Tuition continues to cover approximately 60 percent of the cost of providing a Marquette education. A large part of the difference is made up by contributions and endowment income – a direct result of the continued success of the Magis Campaign in raising both endowment and current-use dollars.

Challenges and opportunities

The academic and financial successes of fiscal 2003 underscore the tremendous opportunities before Marquette University. Increased awareness of the university in its core recruiting areas of Wisconsin and Illinois and also throughout the country has produced a surge in the number of students interested in a Marquette education. Alumni and friends of the university have never been more engaged in their support and advocacy on behalf of Marquette. At the same time, the size of Marquette's endowment – only 1/5th that of Boston College and 1/10th that of Notre Dame University – is a significant constraint on the university's ability to build student scholarship opportunities, to attract top-notch faculty and to support the university's expanding physical plant. The growth and success experienced in the past year only heighten the need for additional resources to deliver on the university's promise to provide an education built on the pillars of excellence, faith, leadership and service.
